IIC STUDENT & EMERGING CONSERVATOR CONFERENCES

aim to create a platform where conservation students and young conservators from around the world, as well as those in related disciplines and professions, can meet to discuss their aims, needs and expectations. The conferences allow the next generation of conservation professionals to learn from the experience and advice of professionals and share their plans for the future.

Following on from the successful previous Student & Emerging Conservator Conferences in London (2011), Copenhagen (2011) and Warsaw (2015), we are delighted to announce the fourth conference in Bern. It will be held over two days and consists of moderated panel discussions, studio visits and social events.

The title of the 2017 conference is inspired by the Swiss educational philosopher Joachim Pestalozzi, whose credo of 'Learning with Head, Heart, and Hands' is also very applicable to the conservation profession.

PROGRAM

THURSDAY • 12TH OCTOBER • 2017 • HEAD

Head – Scientific Research / Conservation Science and its Application

How are scientific research and conservation science applied to the profession and how do they support conservation and restoration practice?

FRIDAY • 13TH OCTOBER • 2017 • HANDS & HEART

Hands – Conservation / Restoration in Practice

The development of practical and theoretical skills during a career and opportunities and perspectives on specialization in conservation and in related fields

Heart – Passion and Communication in Conservation

How does one communicate with an employer, how does one work in a team, what are the responsibilities? Self-confidence for an emerging conservator - and the question of appropriate salary

We look forward to seeing you in Bern
